THE case brought before the Hon. C. MAY, on Tuesday, in which Captain THEBAUD, or the steamship Esmeralda, was charged with a breach of the Chinese Passengers Act of 1855 and of Ordinance 5 of 1874, bearing, as draw credits. If you can't do this let us know it does, in some measure on the interests at once. In reply- We have received your of commerce, calls for some comment. The breach complained of was that the master of the Esmeralda, which vessel is going to bring £15,000 to £20,000. put forward, showing that one reading of the Ordinance might be that Hongkong was the port of destination for the Esmeraldo. In support of this argument is the fact, which was elicited from the witnesses for the prosecution, that the vessel cleared for stating against what bills. Put in an envelope, Hongkong, and cleared again in this port for Manila. The question then arises whether or not they may not be decined two separate yoyages. As a matter of course, if the Crown wished to maintain their contention it would be urged that Hongkong was only a port of call. It seems to us absurd that the Government can compel shipowners who are desirous of carrying Chinese passengers to employ two steamers in place of one. It could not be said that a steamer bringing passengers from Amoy to Hongkong to be re-shipped in another for Manila was violating the Act. This argument is certainly worthy of consideration; for it is clear that | two following letters:if it only requires that two vessels must be employed to do the work of one, the hard ship must be upon the shipowners. Then, where is the object of the Act—the protection of the Chinese? Doos it not necessarily must be greater in one instance than it would be in the otner, giving just cause for the itinerant merchant to say-"Save me from my friends!" Esmeralda is placed at a disadvantage, which has evidently, by the action taken, long been severely felt. The Act was framed with the most laudable motives, but it was certainly never designed to be a check upon lawful commerce, and it is to be hoped that it may be relaxed, or, if necessary, altered, rather than prove in its operation obstructive or burdensome legitimate trade. It showed a littleness of mind that hardly assorts with our preconceived ideas of the great King and general. n the Potsdam Pulace there are rooms even more characteristic. Here is his little diningroom where he and one of the favourite generals -Ziethen most likely-would retire and dine quite alone. There were no other guests and no attendants. Beside the King's ceat there is a trapdoor in the floor, and on this the dishes and plates were sent up and down. Another room was his study. You can see his chair and his writing-table-all inkstained. It is covered in faded dove-coloured velvet. The King was not very careful about drawing-room jurniture. His dogs etrode about through the Palace and tore all the silk from the cushions of the chairs. This velvet-covered writing table is blotted all over with ink stains. In one corner the velvet has been stripped off and cut away. Where is the relic and who was the thief? They tell you it was the Great Napoleon who carried off these few inches of threadbare velvet as his souvenir of the conqueror of his country. Here the King used to sit, rising at four or five in the morning, and going through the husiness of a merchant's clerk. He did everything himself, read letters and answered bem, and was his own Minister of War and Justice. From that seat of his you can look out at the Havel, with the tall-masted boats cliding along with the tide. There is an old linden tree which rather obstructs your view. This was the petition tree. On this his subjects. when they wanted to petition the King, hung up their documents. The King good them from the window, and granted or refused as bo thought the occasion required. This is the tree with the matting cover that meets you as you enter the town. The whole paluce abounds in personal details. Bessie Locket to her mother," and was doubtless the vulgar equivalent of the "avaunt" or "ayast" with which the high-polite tragedy queen keeps a rival at arm's length. As for the "ronyon," Dr. Mackuy tells us that "it was in Shakespear's time a term of contempt, implying manginess." This is perfectly true, but then be wanders away from the point altogether, and adds, " Roynish, like the French rognous, meant mangy, and was derived, like the French word. from the Gaelie roinne, the bair; rorinneach, hairy; and roinnidh, a hairy person." A most extraordinary derivation truly to any one who has ever noticed how little hair a mangy dog the occupation of Messrs. RAYNAL & Co. can boast of. Rogne, the old form of which was roigne, is simply the Latin robiginem, as any one who has paid any attention to the steps by which Latin has been worn down into French adjective formed from rogne. The "Roynouse" scubbes, applied to the "bules and botches" in No. 1, Stanley Street, lately in the occupation Piers Plowman's line, certainly did not mean of Mesers. DREYER & Co. hairy. "Gramerey," again, Dr. Mackay traces to gradh mo cridhe, pronounced gramachree or Street. gramochies, and meaning "love of my heart," and suggests that these "syllables might, to Terrace. writers knowing nothing of Gaelic, and a little French, sound very like the two French words | No. 31, Queen's Road, at present in the occuwhich have been so generally considered the pation of Miss GARRETT. Possession from 1st origin of the phrase." But then it seems a November. 'little odd, to say the least of it, that people who knew nothing of Gaelic should use them at all, while the "graunt merci" of Chauser and Spenser connects the words still more closely IMPERIAL FIRE INSURANCE COMwith the French. But it would be endless to follow Dr. Mackay through all his blunders. Perhaps these are not more in number than | | THE Undersigned, Agents for the above were to be expected from a writer who writes thus:-" But the language never wholly died against Fire to the extent of $60,000 on any out of England proper, though it was to a large one extent superseded by the use, among the literary and educated classes, first of the Anglo-Saxon and Tentonic substratum brought in by the invaders, and by the second stratum, itself of Celtic origin, superadded by the Normans." This looks as if Dr. Mackay either does not know that the Normans spoke French or doss not know that French is a Romance language. We are quite in the dark about the "England proper" where Guelic was spoken before Englishmen came to give their name to the land, and we hope that Dr. Mackay will at some future time deign to point out the difference between the "Anglo-Saxon and the Teutonio substratum." As he cites the name of the river Avon, so often coupled with the poet's name, as a proof that mid-England "was not so thoroughly Saxonized | Rates. either in speech or blood, as the southern or eastern shores of the island," we presume that he has never heard of the Avon of Somerset, the two Avons of Wiltshire, and all the other "Avons, which, though they may not find a place on Dr. Mackay's map, are to be found in almost

ENDEAVOUR. A meaning cry as the world rolls by Through gloom of cloud and story of sky. Rings in my cars for ever : And I know not what it profits a man To plough and sow, to study and plan. And reap the harvest never. " Abide in truth, abide," Spake a low voice at my side, "Abide thou and endeavour."

And even though, after care and toil, I should see my hopes from a kindly soil Though late yet blossoming ever, Perchance the prize were not worth the pain. Perchance the fretting and wasting of brain Wins its true guerdon never. "Abide in love, abide." The tender voice replied. "Abide thou and endeavour."

Strive, endeavour ; it profits more To fight and fall than on Time's dall shore To sit an idler over : (For to him who bares his arm to the strife Firm at his post in the battle of life. The victory faileth never. Therefore in faith abide." The carnest voice still cried. "Abide thou and endeavour."

PINNATED OR PRAIRIE GROUSE SHOOTING.

BY CAPTAIN BOGARDUS. A cloudy day, cool air, the dogs feeling working well, plenty of grouse in the stubbles, and the sportsman out of the glaring sunshine and able to shoot deliberately and well, make great enjoyment and a good bag. On the clear days, when the grouse have left the stubbles for the prairie-grass and corn, instead of shooting all the time until you are tired, as you will be before night, until you have been seasoned and got into hard condition of muscle and wind, lay off in some house, or your camp, or in your waggon in the shade, if you can find it, until about four or half-past four o'clock in the afternoon. Then it will be time to begin to best the stubbles again. The grouse will have come, the resorts in which they spent the hot hours refreshed and rested, will be in good fattle for the sport. The sun will get low and land to the westward; the dew will begin the birds easily, they will lie well, and you may shoot as long as you can see in the

AN UGLY FOOTPATR. Where the protruding ends of slate were close together, long slabs of slate were laid across them, forming a sort of footpath, such as might suit a chamois hunter; where they were not sufficiently in line or were too far distant from each other, we worked our way from one protruding and of slate to another as best we could: and where a long interval of 20ft, or 80ft, did not allow of this latter mode of progress ropes of twisted juniper branches had been stretched from one protruding end to another, and slabs of slate had been placed in these, with their inner enda resting on any crevices which could be found in the precipico wall, thus forming a a footpath with great gaps in it, through which we could look down sometimes a long distance, and which bent and shook beneath our feet, allowing the slabs every now and then to drop-out and fall down towards the Sutlej, till shattered into innumerable frag-be quite recovered his spirits; he went down rollicking and singing, and the first to enter the droaded Shipki where some Tartar young, women speedily brought him to his bearings, and threw him into a state of great perplexity. It took us nearly ten hours to reach Shinki from Naugea fields, and we started at four in the morning in order to escape the full effect of the sun's rays when ascending the pass, which involved no rock-climbing, but a coninuous and very steep ascent up a corksorew path, which was the best I had seen since leaving Pangay. Though the gir, generally speaking, is quite cool and invigorating at these great elevations, vet the reflected and radiating rock-beat is someimes exceedingly oppressive; and so powers. ful are the rays of the sun in summer, that exposure to them, or even to a good reflection of them, will destroy the skin of the bands or face of a European in five minutes, or even less. A short time before reaching the Handkerchiefs, Blue...... extreme summit of the pass, we rested for a little on an open brow of the mountain covered with grass and flowers. The view over Jeans, 30 yards the Spiti ranges to the north-west was veryextensive and striking; for, though it was a a land of desolation on which we gazed, it was under an intensely dark blue sky. It was beautifully coloured with snow and cloud and varienated rook, and presented vast ranges of victuresquely-shaped peaks, between two of which the 18,000 feet Manorung Pass could easily be discorned. Westward, over sections of the Sutlei valley, near Rarang and Pangay, the great peaks and snows of the Indian Kailas mingled with the clouds of the Indian monsoon, which were arrested on its southern side. Behind us, and overhanging us, were glaciers and snowy peaks. Then came the summit of the Kunzma Pies: and to the north-east the vast citadel or Lie Porgyul. Though the view was limited on one side, yet it was much more extensive than any I have seen from any other Himalavan pass—even from the Shinkal which is at least 2.000 feet higher. An enormous semicircle was visible of grand precipices, high mountain peaks, and snowy summits over

"A mistake has been made in contrasting Little Orphan polyandry with polygumy; whereas being Lotus the marriage of one woman with two or more Ly-ce-moon men, it is itself a form of polygamy, and Malacca ought properly to be contrasted with Mariveles polygyny, or the marriage of one man to two or more women.
